Dear Judge Kahn:

After reading my book "America's Judicial Meltdown", that I sent you in early December 2006, it should be apparent to you that you made a devastating decision in the granting of summary judgment in the case of Gentiluomo v. Brunswick, Civil Action No. 96-CV-0544.

Your erroneous decision has inflicted much pain and suffering on me and my family. As you well know by now, I've lost my life's savings pursuing the "American Dream" of licensing my patent for royalties. Due to an unscrupulously operating judicial system, that illegally favors corporations over individuals, I was denied my Constitutional Rights to a jury trial, in order to prove the validity of my patent. Therefore, in the matter of justice, one would think that you would reconsider your decision, and by some means reinstate my case for trial by jury. This begs the question, do judges ever realize after rendering a decision, that they made a judicial error, and then take the initiative to rectify the error?

If you profess to be an ethical person, you will take the initiative to correct your error. May God bless you.

Sincerely,

Joseph A. Gentiluomo
